Not illustrated. 1892 Excerpt: . . . power and godhead--in His works, by HiB ministers, in the events of His Providence, in the story of redemption. II. By means apparently disproportionate (verses 24-27). The Syrian⁸ were numerous-- tilled the country : the Israelites were comparatively few-- like t wo little flocks of kids. The Syrians were well appointed: the Israelites bnt indifferently equipped. The Syrians chose their own battle-ground where their peculiar method of chariot warfare would have everything in its favour: the Israelites cautiously kept to the hills, and for six days harrowed the invaders as they marched along the plains, until on the seventh day the battle was joined, and it would seem to a spectator that the little band of Israelites would be instantly swallowed up by the Syrian hosts. But Jehovah is not confined to numbers, or to the bett-considered human methods. Ho makes the weak things of the world confound the things that are mighty, to show that the excellency of the power is not of man, but of God. III. By gaining a signal victory over the enemies of His people (verses 29, 30). Through the might of the Lord the Israelites were again victorious. They fell upon the Svrians, and sleiv great numbers of them. Seized with panic, the rest fled to Aphek, where a wall, probably cast down by an earthquake, crushed some thousands more in its fall. The vain boasting of the heathen was silenced; the Syrian host was scattered, and their king a...
