This township is characterized by a central mountain, part of the Black Range, forming the divide between Rio Grande and Gila River. Spurs radiate from this mountain, the southeast corner of the township being extremely rugged and mountainous and intersected by deep canyons, while the east and north portions are fairly level. The main timber belt is located in the south and west. The east portion is covered with juniper, pifion pine, and scrub oak, with walnut, box elder, sycamore, and cottonwood along the creek bottoms. This township can best be logged by means of a railroad up Gila River. From the forks of...
