Outskirts Press, United States, 2009. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 213 x 140 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . You never know what tomorrow will bring. Helen Liere finds out how life-changing an ordinary day can be. When returning home from presenting a workshop she is nearly killed after being hit head-on by an out-of-control pickup truck. This is her inspiring true story of recovery and transformation. As Liere recalls that fateful day, she lets the reader into her mind as she realizes that she has just been hit by a vehicle traveling at least 60 mph. The irony of this near fatal crash only comes to her later: she had presented a traffic safety workshop on the correct use of child safety seats just the night before. And the crash happens near where she grew up and attended school. After her Life Flight to one of the two trauma hospitals in Portland, Oregon, we see what she sees as she goes in and out of consciousness. We can almost hear the drill as the doctors insert chest tubes into her two deflated lungs. Later we see the drab intensive care room as she regains consciousness and sees the fear in the eyes of her husband and children. We see her try to understand just how damaged her body is. We experience her feelings as this very independent and successful business woman realizes she is going to be dependent on others for a while. We see how woefully unprepared she was to return home from the hospital. Arriving home without the furniture or equipment she needed just to be comfortable, let alone recover, she learns what questions she should have asked before leaving the safety of the hospital. Watch as this very independent woman learns...
